

I'm writing to request that the FCC not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law. Before Attorney General Steve Carter started the "no-call list," my husband and I would receive about 10 telemarketer calls on an average day. On days when we were both at work, we would just come home and clear the "unavailable" calls off the Caller ID. But, on days when one of us happened to be home, the ringing of the phone was unending. And the calls in the evening, just as we were getting home from work and sitting down to dinner, were the worst. Now, as a stay-at-home mom with a new baby, our days are so peaceful with no telemarketers calling. I can't tell you the last time I've gotten a call from a telemarketer. I would not like happy environment in my home once again marred by unwanted phone solicitations. Again, please don't replace Indiana's strong Telephone Privacy law. The peace and quiet that exists in my home is at stake.
